Initial Actions

- Acknowledge distress, identify options to address underlying difficulties and agree a plan with the YP.
- Clarify confidentiality and issues of consent*.
- Follow individual agency service protocol if in place.
- Check if the child or young person is getting the support they need from elsewhere.

Encourage them to talk to their parents or another 'trusted adult' for help with any underlying problems and difficulties (Every effort should be made to encourage the young person to speak to their parent/carer, if not you should inform them that you will be sharing your concerns with their parent/carer).

Always follow safeguarding guidance and procedures and keep records of your actions.

Be clear that information about them will be treated with respect but may be shared with others in their best interests.

Explain that a plan to help will be developed together by them, their family and the team of professionals around them.

Ask, Listen and Get help

ASK: although self-harm is often a hidden behaviour, the child or young person may give subtle signs that they want help. As a trusted adult, learn to be alert to these signs and respond to these invitations by being ‘helpfully nosey’. Here are some simple tips for conversations about self-harm:

- Take all self-harm seriously
- Treat the child or young person with respect and empathise: get across that you care, and that you want to understand and to help
- Take a non-judgemental approach: reassure that you understand that self-harm may be helping the child or young person to cope at the moment
- Make sure the child or young person understands the limits of confidentiality.

Avoid:

- Reacting with strong or negative emotions: alarm or discomfort; asking abrupt or rapid questions; threatening or getting angry; making accusations, e.g. that the young person is attention-seeking; frustration if the support offered does not seem to be making a difference
- Too much focus on the self-harm itself: engaging in power struggles or demanding that self-harm stop; ignoring other warning signs; promising to keep things secret…
- Commenting, advising, or attempting to solve all their issues (in that first instance).

LISTEN: make yourself fully available at that moment in time when a child or young person seeks you out or responds to an invitation to talk further:

- Listen carefully in a calm and compassionate way
- Have your eyes, ears and body language open to what the young person has to say, without judging, or being shocked
- Show the young person they can trust that you will first hear what they have to say, and later support them if another professional needs to be involved.

GET HELP: in some instances, you/your agency may be able to respond to the child or young person’s needs. This includes encouraging the child or young person to talk to their friends, their parents and other trusted adults about their thoughts and feelings. In other circumstances, you will need to help the child or young person get additional support.
What Children and Young People say about self-harm

National surveys: Young people say that conflicts with other people, for example, family members, siblings, teachers and boyfriends / girlfriends, are the most common reasons for self-harm. These conflicts could be about different things, but they often make young people feel pushed away, left out, unfairly criticised or out of control. Young people also report that they can feel embarrassed or ashamed about self-harming themselves, and that they fear being judged.

Some young people have also voiced concerns with the attitudes of front-line professionals and their perceived lack of understanding of self-harm. For example, young people seeking help in emergency departments have reported lack of privacy, with confidential matters discussed in open areas, and lack of respect. These attitudes and perceptions can have a negative effect on the ways in which young people access help and support; many young people report turning to their peers and/or to online support, instead of their GPs, teachers or parents.

What Parents/Carers say about self-harm:
Parents/carers often experience a range of emotions when they find out their child is self-harming. Shock, sadness, anger, disbelief and blame to name a few. Some parents have said they feel isolated and embarrassed because of the stigma attached to self-harm.

Parents have described negative reactions from family members and professionals and sometimes feel excluded from their child’s care. Parents can say or do the ‘wrong’ things and can unintentionally make the situation worse, but equipped with the right information and support, parents/carers are in a really good position to support their child.

Parents/carers want to be able to help and understand how to support their child, but will often need advice or information on how best to do this.

What Professionals say about self-harm:
Research indicates that many professionals feel they need a deeper understanding of how to support young people who self-harm. They do not understand the reasons why young people self-harm and do not know what language to use when talking to a young person about self-harm.

Similarly, teachers felt ‘helpless’ and unsure of what they can say; 80% wanted clear practical advice and materials that they can share directly with young people.
